Misleading Impression

The article in The Washington Post on May 4 left the inaccurate and wholly misleading impression that the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs had adopted an anti-CIA policy with respect to the employment of its graduates. This is incorrect. The Woodrow Wilson School has taken the position that the educational process and covert intelligence activities do not mix. Hence, we have adopted a policy that no graduate student, while enrolled in the School, shall engage in covert intelligence activities.

The student is, of course, entirely free to accept any professional employment he chooses following graduation, and representatives of U.S. intelligence agencies continue to be welcomed by us in their search for talented professional staff.
